

Location

Nash Point lighthouse is located in South Wales on the magnificent Vale of Glamorgan Heritage Coastline and the Wales Coast Path, which runs the entire length of the Welsh coast, passes through the grounds of the Lighthouse. It is approximately one mile from the small village of Marcross, three miles west of Llantwit Major.

The lighthouse is sited within a Site of Special Scientific Interest and is notable for its variety of plant and birdlife including the rare tuberous thistle (cirsium tuberosus).

The stretch of coastline is rugged directly below the lighthouse though clean sandy beaches are close by. There are breathtaking coastal views of the Bristol Channel, North Somerset and Devon and as far as the southernmost point of the Gower Peninsula.

The cottages at the lighthouse are within easy reach of the beautiful hills and valleys for which South Wales is so well known and many tourist areas, such as Gower, Brecon Beacons and Wales' capital city, Cardiff.

Trinity House

History of Nash Point Lighthouse

Trinity House is the General Lighthouse Authority for England, Wales and the Channel Islands.

Nash Point Lighthouse was designed and built by Joseph Nelson being completed in 1832 to mark the hazardous sandbanks off Nash Point, overlooking the Bristol Channel. This followed the wrecking of the passenger steamer Frolic on these sands in 1831, with a heavy loss of life.

Two circular towers were built, each with massive walls and a stone gallery. The eastern, or high lighthouse being 37 metres high and the western or low lighthouse 25 metres high. Placed 302 metres apart they provided leading lights to indicate safe passage past the sandbanks. The high light was painted with black and white stripes and the low light was white. In those days both towers showed a fixed light which was either red or white depending on the direction from which a vessel approached. The red sector marked the Nash Sands.

The low light was abandoned circa 1925 and the high light was modernised and painted white. In place of the fixed light a new first order catadioptric lens was installed which gave a white and red group flashing, this was removed in the automation of the station and replaced with a rotating optic. Nash Point Lighthouse was the last manned lighthouse in Wales. It was automated in 1998 with the keepers leaving for the last time on the 5 August. The lighthouse is now monitored and controlled from the Planning Centre at Trinity House in Harwich, Essex.

Accommodation at the Lighthouse

Why not treat yourselves or your guests to stay at the former lighthouse keepers cottage as part of the wedding celebrations.

In association with Trinity House, Rural Retreats is pleased to present two refurbished former lighthouse keepers' cottages.

Nash Point Lighthouse is situated within the Vale of Glamorgan Heritage Coast. This spectacular coastline is 28 miles long and covers an area from Penarth to Porthcawl and is ideal for both walking and cycling. There are wonderful safe beaches, many of which have been awarded the coveted blue flag. The beaches, in particular at Ogmere-by-Sea (just over four miles away), Barry Island, Southerndown and Porthcawl are particularly good for windsurfing. For children, the area is particularly well served with Barry Island Pleasure Park within a 20-minute drive. St Donats Art Centre offers exhibitions, cinema, dance, theatre, music and children's events. The Museum of Welsh Life at St Fagans is also 20 minutes away.

Cowbridge offers a good range of shops with small boutiques, craft and art galleries, excellent restaurants and pubs. Further along the coast is the famous Gower peninsula and walking on the Mumbles.

The perimeter of the holiday site is fully fenced and gated but once outside this area, it is very dangerous for children. Please ensure children are supervised at all times. The historic fog signal is occasionally sounded (weather permitting) for the benefit of visitors and not as an aid to navigation, usually on the first Saturday and third Sunday of each month, and on other special occasions such as when a wedding takes place at the lighthouse.
