O'Neill's is ideally situated in the heart of central London, a stone's throw away from the energetic life of Soho, the bustle of China Town and the famous Leicester Square. The site was once known as the Flamingo Club in 1960's and is where the famous Georgie Fame recorded The Midnight Train. It then became Whiskey a go go and played host to James Brown and Kool and the gang followed by The Wag club in the 80's and 90's. Then here we are today as O'Neill's where we carry on the live music by night and the relaxed drink with some food by day.

DID YOU KNOW?

David Bowie shot the 1984 MTV video 'Blue Jean' in this very building.
